Denny,

Wow, the evaluations were really great! Not surprised, best info to show around!

I am thankful for your time, energy and investment into the families and educators of the Flathead Valley each year. Great things happening and fun to be a part of solutions and people having fun with kids.

What I am thinking personally and professionally.....higher trust, less control and more fun.

In general, I am noticing more adults and kids with anxiety and depression. I have followed this in the news and it seems like a growing trend. Skilled teachers and parents have clear thinking (determined boundaries and a code), more to celebrate and experience joy with what they do and who they do it with. I am challenging myself with new solutions to reach even more parents and teachers.

Can't wait to see you again, let me know if you get something together for a group sharing in CA!

creating resistance

With total gratitude,

Dennis M. McLoughlin

In a world of "positive behavior plans/supports," it can be so challenging to always come up with ways to motivate the "unmotivated" and support the "struggling" student. Teachers can feel a lot of pressure, and are definitely under-trained in this area. The build-up of pressure leads to burnout so often, and high trust is the professional development educators are missing. I hope I can bring some of these concepts to my school, and that they are met with excitement. Thank you for taking time to share high trust with us. This is the most pertinent professional development I've had.
